CHAIN OF ACCIDENTS

Runaway Team Turn in a Fire Alarm and Chief Runs Over Small Boy.

A runaway team last evening brought out the Ogden fire department and caused considerable excitement in other ways. The team belonged to a Mr. Read and got started by another horse running into them. They ran north on Washington avenue across the Ogden river bridge and ran into a street car pole in front of the Riverside mills, on which was located a fire alarm box. They knocked the box down and left a good part of the wagon. They knocked the box down and left a good part of the wagon. They characterise the was ready to do the job I covered him. I told him if he made a move I would shoot him on the spot.

"I don't know just how I escaped from that blood-thirsty mob yesterday. When I try to think of the details of the chase my mind wanders. It is like a dream." team went on down Seventeenth street until one of the animals fell in the ditch near the Weber county fair grounds.

As Chief Graves was following the apparatus to the fire he ran into a boy on a bicycle near the corner of Twenty-first street and Washington avenue. The boy's street and Washington avenue. The boy's wheel was smashed and the chief was of the opinion that the wheels of his bugsy passed over the boy's legs. He returned expecting to find him dead or hadly crippled, but could not find him at all, and a diligent inquiry failed to find any trace of him, so it is presumed that the injury was not serious.

DEMOCRATION.

ALSO A TRAIN ROBBER.

Chicago, Nov. 28.—Peter Neidermeier confessed tonight that he had been guilty of robbing trains in addition to his other terms. He admitted that he was the leader of a gang that held up and robbing trains in addition to his other terms. in to the motto.

It was the general sentiment of those present that a great opportunity and a great necessity exists for the Democracy of the county, state and nation to unite. Chairman Dee, who called the meeting, was absent owing to an unexpected demand on his time, but those present discussed the situation and decided to call another meeting at the same place next Saturday.

In men to whom he had surrendered, asked him if he would give him a promise. Hamilton said he would, and Neidermeier replied:

"Welt, if you will give my mother one-half of the reward money that is hanging over me I will tell you something."

Before he could talk further the crown pressed in close and Neidermeier refused to go on. Today Hamilton was in the city and Neidermeier told him of his part of the county, state and nation to unite. Chairman Dee, who called the meeting, was absent owing to an unexpected demand on his time, but those present discussed the situation and decided to call another meeting at the same place next Saturday.

It is probable that a dinner for Democrats will be had at which there will be speeches and a general good time.

A resolution, making the Utah State Journal the organ of Democracy in Weber county and an organ of the Democracy of the state was offered, and it was agreed to submit the resolutions to another meeting.

Being of wood, it floated, and as it had not turned over, the onions provided the cook with food enough for a week, not turned over, the onions provided the cook with food enough for a week, for it really takes a great many onions to season salad for an ocean liner.

The French cook was very glad, however, when he floated to an island and, once on shore, being tired of one kind of diet, he looked around immediately for something else to eat.

But there was nothing on the island. No breadfruit, no oysters, no goats, no berries, nothing that one expects on a well regulated desert island.

Finally, when he traveled over long stretches of hot sand, he came to three cocoanut trees, and in a little bay made by a curve in the shore he found swarms of crabs.

A woman's "yes" is anything but agreeable to a man when it is uttered with the rising inflection and accompanied by a curiosity to a woman's curiosity has been satirized it is the last attribute which men would be willing to have her relinquish, for her curiosity is primarily in men and their affairs, and absence of curiosity would mean absence of interest — and that wouldn't do at all.

Did you ever stop to think that a weman is never magnanimous in her treatment of men unless she has the advantage? By the same token, no disinterested man ever gave comfort to a woman when she needed it.

arought me here. I shall thus learn to cook crabs in all ways, and when I am rescued I shall be famous."

So every day the French cook was busy. He boiled crabs and he broiled them, he fried them and he smothered them, he sauted them and he smothered them, and he deviled them in many new and wonderful ways.

Often he lacked the proper seasoning, but he discovered a certain kind of pepper grass and mustard grew thickly on the island and he invented strange but delicious sauces.

And for a time he was very happy. But after a while he longed for someody to come and taste his crabs. All ay he would stand, watching, watching for a sign of a sail and forget to pok and almost forget.

And for a time he was very happy.
But after a while he longed for somebody to come and taste his crabs. All day he would stand, watching, watching for a sign of a sail and forget to cook and almost forgot to eat in his anxiety.

One night there was an awful storm and in the morning, when the French cook looked out, he saw, lying on the sand, two small figures.

He ran to them quickly and leaned over the younger—a girl. She was not dead, but was sleeping peacefully with her hand under her cheek. The boy, too, was asleep; evidently they had become exhausted after a long struggle in the water.

The delicious fragrance stole out on the air and woke the little girl.

"Get up, Ben," she cried, leaning over the boy," some one is cooking dinner."

"Oh, you are dreaming Babe," murmured the boy, and went to sleep again. Just then the French cook came around a sand hillock and Babe jumped to her feet. The French cook wore his apron and cap, and they shone dazzling white in the sun.

"Dinner eez served, mam'selle," he "Dinner eez served, mam'selle," he said, and bowed with a flourish. Babe clung to Ben, who sat up blink-

CASTAWAYS AND A COOK.

A Story For Children of a Pirate Who Was a Jolly Good Fellow.
(New Tork Sun.)
Once upon a time a French cook was washed overboard from an ocean liner.
It happened this way:
He had carried the enormous wooden bowl in which ne was chopping onions of for the passengers' potato salad to a cool spot on the ship's side, when, suddenly, the bowl had tipped, and in trying to save it over he went into the and found a trail of them on the Fairing.

"How unfortunate," cried the head cook. "There are no more onions." And that night the passengers complained of the tasteless salad.

But the bowl saved the French cook.

Then the French cook recognized his opportunity.

"It is fate," he cried, "that has learned them by experience.

It's as true as turnips that the woman who has learned life's lessons by insight is never trusted by the woman who has learned them by experience.

For the average man to depend on the love of an imaginative woman is like depending on the money he's going to save by and by.
